

A photograph showing a man from behind, wearing a wide-brimmed cowboy hat and a light-colored long-sleeved shirt. He is working on a large, dark green metal structure, possibly a piece of agricultural machinery or a truck bed, which is surrounded by tall, spiky agave plants. The setting appears to be a rural, hilly area.

Mexico's ancient drink under threat

By Claire Marshall
BBC News, Mexico

In Mexico, producers are warning that the so-called "nectar of the gods" is in danger of extinction.

The popularity of the pre-Hispanic alcoholic drink, pulque, is fading in favour of more conventional beverages such as beer and rum.

Mario Grajedo wobbles slightly as he perches on a stool by the side of the road in Ixmiquilpan in Mexico's Hidalgo state.

This is pulque heartland. On the simple table in front of him is a large maize tortilla covered in hot sauce. Beside it is a jug of the milky liquid. Eating with one hand, he swigs deeply using the other.

Pulque can be drunk neat or sweetened with honey
